Clam shell art

This morning to continue our 'Under the Sea' theme, the children all joined Miss Caitlin on the mat to read a book called "Sharing a Shell" which the children really enjoyed.

After reading this book the children joined Miss Caitlin at the table to do some clam shell art. Miss Caitlin gave each child a folded paper plate for the children to paint the inside pink and we will finish the outside grey once the insides have dried. The children all did a great job and they so far look great.

Hopscotch

As part of our number recognition journey, we decided to play a little game to help the children identify their numbers in a fun way.

Joanne was first to try hopscotch out. We first went through the numbers to make sure she knew which number was which. The next step was to throw the sack onto a number. Before jumping on the number, we had to identify it and all the others we landed on to collect the sack.

All of Joanne's peers cheered her on as she completed the game multiple times. Adaline and Eloise were next to participate, both taking turns and sharing the space.

Ocean sensory tray

The children were really interested in the ocean sensory tray this morning, as some of the children hadn't seen it yet.

Cooper was using his hand to feed sand into the shark's mouth, pretending that the shark was super hungry. He would tip the sand out and start again, this time using shells as well. Tuscany and Adaline identified most of the animals starting with the seahorse and the whale and continuing all around the tray until getting back to the seahorse.

At first, Meghan was unsure of the set up, feeling each different object in the tray and noticing the different textures. By the end of the experience, Meghan enjoyed playing with the boats pretending to sail over the animals in the ocean.

Olympic Games Junior

As you may know, the Olympic games started last Friday. After speaking with Miss Taylah, we decided we would make our way outside to spectate the younger children in their own Olympic games.

After watching, the Jellyfish class invited us to participate. Miss Taylah had made weights using pool noodles and provided a variety of different activities such as hurdles, jumping bags and a rings for the children to jump in.

All the children got involved and lifted the weights. When it was Adaline's turn to lift the weight, Miss Caitlin asked "Is it heavy?" Adaline was quick to respond and said "This is easy. It's not heavy at all!"

Reflection of the day

Happy Tuesday!

We had a fun-filled morning with lots of different activities for the children to explore. We made clam shells, played hopscotch, had our music lesson with Mr Brendan and enjoyed some Olympic games activities. We like to keep busy here in the Dolphins room!
